

Los Angeles Times

Weekend

Visually impaired children receive life lessons through golf

By Weekend staff

JUNE 17, 2016, 10:27 AM

The First Tee of Orange County, a local nonprofit that touts its mission as providing "young people with character-building and life-skills lessons using golf as the platform," visited the Blind Children's Learning Center in Santa Ana on June 10.

Ten volunteer coaches with the group taught nearly 65 visually impaired preschool students how to golf using plastic golf clubs, tennis balls and a modified putting green, as well as how to show respect and sportsmanship, a news release said.

Diego Gonzalez

(Courtesy of The First Tee of Orange County)

Diego Gonzales with The First Tee of Orange County visited the Blind Children's Learning Center in Santa Ana to help teach nearly 65 visually impaired preschool students how to golf.

OR SEE MORE GALLERIES

Caitlin Smith with The First Tee of Orange County

(Courtesy of The First Tee of Orange County)

Caitlin Smith with The First Tee of Orange County visited the Blind Children's Learning Center in Santa Ana to help teach nearly 65 visually impaired preschool students how to golf.

OR SEE MORE GALLERIES

Jason Reddick

(Chairman of The First Tee of Orange County)

Jason Reddick with The First Tee of Orange County visited the Blind Children's Learning Center in Santa Ana to help teach nearly 65 visually impaired preschool students how to golf.

- f
- 🐦
- ✉

SEE MORE GALLERY